This single-family house was designed specifically for the individual dreams of the client and his family. Located on the north side of a mountain, the problem of bringing the sun into the house was solved by splitting the roof in two, providing large south facing windows at high level. In addition, the west facade was angled so that the winter sun could penetrate deep into the open-plan living and dining areas. A large terrace acts as an extension of the living room, providing magnificent views of the valley below.
